Mr. McCrary, of Iowa, chairman of the House Committee on Railways and Canals, has replied to the recent open setter from Mr. Adams, of Massachusetts, upon the subject of national control or supervision of the rallways. Mr. McCrary is the author of the House bill providing for the control and supervision of inter-State railways, now before the Senate, and which Mr. Adams expressed the hope would not pass the Senate because in his opinion, it could not be so executed as to obtain the desired result. He did not think that the nine commissioners provided for could possibly revise all the freight tariffs. He recommended a calm reasoning with the boards of directors, and the bringing to bear upon An article upon the Presidential question them an irresistible public opinion, as they
